Israel, saying...

Leviticus 24:15b-16

A photograph of an ancient, cracked scroll with text overlaid. The scroll is made of a light brown, textured material, possibly papyrus or parchment, and shows significant wear and tear, including deep cracks and frayed edges. The text is printed in a black, serif font over the scroll's surface.

Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain;
for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain.

—Exodus 20:7

Leviticus 24:19, 20

A black chalkboard with white chalk text. The text is written in a casual, slightly irregular font. The first line reads "Eye for eye, and", the second line reads "tooth for tooth.", and the third line reads "- Matthew 5:38".

“Eye for eye, and tooth for tooth.”
- Matthew 5:38

Leviticus 24:22

They who say that we should love our fellow-citizens but not foreigners, destroy the universal brotherhood of mankind, with which benevolence and justice would perish forever.

— Marcus Tullius Cicero —
